Leaning on the rock of the mountain, adapted to the landscape and built with natural materials, this residence has an elongated shape, protected from the north and views onto the sea towards the south. The project succeeds adapting the building in the environment, use of local materials, exploitation of the view and protection from the weather conditions. The challenge was adapting the building in the environment, in a non-provocative way and creating the smallest possible “wound” to the mountain. The synthesis consists of a one storey elongated rectangular parallelepiped hugged by a stonewall on the north and west, with big openings, a water element and outdoor living spaces to the south.
